DID YOU KNOW...

Blocks of ice were used for basic refrigeration throughout the 1800's and the early 1900's.

Attempts at vapor compression refrigeration and gas absorption systems were developed in the mid 1800's however, most used toxic chemicals and were not commercially viable.

The early 1930's saw the development of Freon as a refrigerant and introduced the first, relatively safe, commercial units.

R-134a (tetrafluoroethane) has been used extensively for refrigeration since the early 1990's as Freon has been identified as a major contributor to ozone depletion.
