SPORTS DIGEST

Kal Tire golf tourney starts Friday

TEMISKAMING SHORES (Staff) – The recent spate of wet weather across Temiskaming hasn’t dampened the enthusiasm of area golfers.

The Haileybury Golf Club will host the 16th annual Kal Tire Two-Man Scramble June 23-25.

Prince Edward Island Red Oak

The red oak (Quercus rubra) was designated as Prince Edward Island's provincial tree in 1987.
It once populated much of the island and was a source of material for settlers to build furniture, barrels and ships. Today the population of the red oak has greatly dwindled, but can still be found scattered throughout the province.

Quebec Yellow birch

Quebec adopted the yellow birch as its provincial tree in 1993.
This medium sized hardwood is prized for its lumber, which is used to build furniture, doors, cabinets and flooring.
The beautiful and functional tree grows in the southern regions of Quebec and can thrive in many terrains and conditions.

Saskatchewan White birch

The white birch (Betula papyrifera) became Saskatchewan's arboreal emblem in 1988. Also known as paper birch and canoe birch, this hardwood tree is found throughout much of the province. It's cultivated to be used for plywood, veneer and lumber. It was once used by First Nations people to make dwellings and canoes. Photo caption: White birch (*Betula

Yukon Subalpine fir

In 2001, Yukon adopted the subalpine fir (Abies lasiocarpa) as its emblematic tree. Growing anywhere from 6 to 20 metres, this conifer thrives at higher elevations. When the needles are infused they produce a lemony tasting tea rich in vitamin C. First Nations people utilize this tea as a medicinal remedy.

Alberta Lodgepole pine
The lodgepole pine (Pinus contorta) was chosen to become Alberta's provincial arboreal emblem in 1984. Its wood was once used to make railway ties that connected Alberta to the eastern provinces. Today, it's used to fabricate poles, pulp, plywood and more. The lodgepole pine can reach 25 metres in height and live as long as 100 years. Photo caption: © Jason Hollinger. Used under CC-BY-2.0.

British Columbia Western redcedar
The western redcedar (Thuja plicata) became British Columbia's provincial tree in 1988, coinciding with the 75th anniversary of the BC Forest Service. It's reputed for its incredible height, which can reach a towering 60 metres. The wood of this conifer is highly durable and is used for a vast range of building needs.

Manitoba White spruce
In 1991, the white spruce (Picea glauca) became Manitoba's provincial tree. This conifer grows up to 28 metres high and can live 200 years or more. Its wood is used for construction lumber and pulpwood as well as the building of specialty items such as sounding boards, paddles and oars. Photo caption: Picea glauca, © Nic McPhee (<https://flic.kr/p/NE639>). Used under CC-BY-SA 2.0.

New Brunswick Balsam Fir
The balsam fir (Abies balsamea) became New Brunswick's arboreal emblem in 1987. This tree is an important part of the province's history of pulp and paper production. The wood is also used for lumber.

Ontario Eastern white pine Ontario adopted the pine (Pinus strobus) as its provincial tree in 1980. The evergreen is the tallest found in Eastern Canada. An important part of the province's history, its wood was used by early settlers to build barns and dwellings. The conifer is cultivated as a pulp... and Christmas tree.

Nova Scotia Red Spruce
The red spruce (Picea rubens) became Nova Scotia's arboreal emblem in 1988. It's an important part of the province's history. The wood once provided a cure for rheumatism. Red spruce is cultivated to survive in most terrains.

DID YOU KNOW...

The electric range first was first promoted at the 1893 Chicago World's Fair, employing heavy iron plates as the heating surface. Then came the electric coil stove, which heated pots more efficiently than a metal plate.

It wasn't until the 1970s that glass-ceramic cooktops made a name for themselves in the kitchen. Due to the material's infrared transmission, heat passes from the burner to the pot quickly and more evenly. Also since the surface is flat and non-porous, it can simplify cleaning efforts as long as you follow the right technique.
