Dairy: an industry in constant growth

Did you know that global dairy production has increased by more than 50 per cent over the last 30 years? According to the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO), approximately 150 million households around the world play an active role in the dairy industry. This impressive growth is due in part to the fact that numerous developing countries (primarily in South Asia) are becoming more involved in the production of milk and milk products.

WHITE GOLD

It's common knowledge that milk is an excellent source of calcium, magnesium and vitamins, making it a much-appreciated staple on breakfast tables across the globe. Therefore, it comes as no surprise that more than six billion people consume milk and other dairy products (cheese, yogurt, butter, cream, etc.) on a regular basis.

Furthermore, in addition to creating millions of jobs across the world and contributing to both local and global economies, the dairy industry is in constant evolution. Technological advances in agriculture have allowed producers everywhere to develop new techniques that are more efficient and respectful of the environment and of animals' well-being. Innovations in sustainable farming methods, have, for example, created superior quality products and successfully grown the industry's market share. All in all, thanks to its constant development, the dairy industry certainly has a bright future ahead!

India is the largest producer of milk in the world, producing approximately one out of every five litres consumed worldwide.
