Under the influence of DRUGS or ALCOHOL?

Make sure your holiday memories are happy ones

DON'T DRIVE!

Driving under the influence puts lives at risk

The dangers associated with impaired driving are well known. Nevertheless, every holiday season, countless drivers get behind the wheel either exhausted or under the influence of alcohol, medication or illicit drugs, putting the lives of others at risk as well as their own.

Are you planning on hitting the bar at your holiday shindig? There's nothing wrong with having fun, as long as you don't get behind the wheel afterward! Public transportation, taxis, designated drivers — there are many ways to get home safe and sound without driving your personal vehicle. Other sensible solutions include staying the night or renting a room at a nearby hotel.

BEWARE!
Like extreme fatigue, alcohol, illegal drugs, and medication affect a person's cognitive functions and compromise their ability to drive. In addition to clouding one's judgment, these substances impair a person's concentration, coordination and reaction time.

Dispensing with myths

Even today, many false beliefs about impaired driving continue to circulate. It's about time we unveil the truth behind these misconceptions!

- I ate after I drank; therefore, it's safe to get behind the wheel. Actually, eating after a night of drinking changes absolutely nothing, as the alcohol has already entered your bloodstream. And since the effects of alcohol won't disappear with a little food in your tummy, it's definitely not safe to drive!
- Prescription drugs are a lot less dangerous than illicit drugs. Many types of prescription and over-the-counter medication can significantly compromise a person's ability to drive. Their various side effects (drowsiness, dizziness, blurred vision, reduced concentration, etc.) can be just as dangerous behind the wheel as those of certain illegal substances.
- Men have a higher alcohol tolerance than women. A person's sex doesn't necessarily influence their tolerance level. However, things like body weight, fatigue, medication and metabolism do.
- Police officers can't tell when someone is under the influence of drugs. False! Police officers are specially trained to evaluate someone's ability to drive in different ways — by administering a physical coordination test, for example. Furthermore, a driver can be brought in for further evaluation by a drug recognition expert at the local station.

Did you know

Mixing alcohol with drugs (prescription medication included) leads to a greater impairment of cognitive functions, increasing your risk of causing a crash

Wedding PLANNER & GUIDE

Clever ideas for an inexpensive wedding

Are you in search of some ideas for a wedding that won't leave you and your new spouse in debt for the next ten years? Here are a few tips on how to organize a delightful wedding that will not break your newly joined budgets.

First of all, it's not necessarily a thrifty move to limit the number of guests you invite. In theory, inviting someone to a wedding doesn't cost you anything; by giving you a gift (usually money), the guest is likely giving you more than the cost of his or her meal.

Rather than opting for traditional invitations, you could choose the electronic option. Your photographer or a graphic design service could put together a pretty digital invitation that would save you mailing costs and delays.

Bear in mind that quality can be cost-effective where guest favours and decorations are concerned. If you order some beautiful centrepieces from your favourite florist, they can decorate the reception hall all by themselves, especially if the room you've rented is already attractive. What's more, your decorative elements or centrepieces can also be used as guest favours. If there is only one on each table, you could hold a draw for them, or they could be given away as prizes for entertaining games organized by the master of ceremonies or the DJ.

When planning how to integrate alcohol into your reception, moderation is the key word. Formulas such as open bars can lead to indelicate behaviour from some of your guests and can be very expensive to boot. Instead, opt for a cash bar with a complementary glass of champagne for toasting or else a limited number of free drinks per guest.

Lastly, think about choosing a wedding date just before or just after the high season. Between May and September costs increase astronomically for limousines, caterers, reception halls, florists, and the list goes on. Don't let anybody tell you otherwise — a magical wedding is still possible in April or October!

It is possible to organize a beautiful wedding with a moderately sized budget.
