Terry Fox Run gaining ground

DISTRICT (Staff) – The 37th annual Terry Fox Run is fast approaching.

The fundraiser for cancer research is slated for Sunday, September 17, all across Canada and, indeed, at many international sites.

In South Temiskaming the event has two blast-off points.

It gets underway in New Liskeard with registration at the Don Shepherdson Memorial Arena at 8 a.m. and the route will take advantage of the South Temiskaming Active Travel Organization trail.

In Englehart, registration opens at 12:30 p.m. at Englehart High School.

Hundreds of thousands of people across Canada are expected to participate in the Run in over 700 communities nation wide.

The Run continues to embody the indomitable spirit of Terry Fox.

"In a year where we have enjoyed celebrating our country's 150th birthday, it's been great to hear so many Canadians say that participating in the Terry Fox Run in an important part of the celebration," said Terry's older brother Fred Fox.

Terry was 18 when he was diagnosed with a cancerous tumour in his right leg and had his leg amputated six inches above the knee.

His experiences, not only with his own treatment but seeing the trials others suffered, made him stronger and more compassionate. It was from this strength and compassion that the Marathon of Hope was born.

Since Terry ran in 1980, Canadians have raised over $750 million for cancer research.

Visit terryfox.org for more information.

Non-bee insects play a significant role in pollination

Pollination is essential for flowering plants to reproduce. While honey bees are universally recognized as pollinators, they don't do it alone. Non-bee insect pollinators like moths, butterflies, ants, flies, beetles and wasps tend to get overlooked. Yet, coffee, mangoes and canola are just a few of the crops that depend on them.

A recent survey conducted on five continents, including North America, determined that non-bee insect pollinators are critical players in global crop farming. An international team analyzed 39 studies on the pollinating abilities of honey bees, other bees and non-bee insects on 17 different crops. Led by Dr. Romina Rader of the University of New England in Australia, researchers looked at how often flowers were visited and how much pollen was deposited per visit.

The survey ascertained that the contribution of non-bee insects was similar to that of other types of bees, including bumblebees, leafcutter bees, mining bees, plasterer bees and sweat bees. While non-bee insects were less effective pollinators, they visited flowers more often.

Studies found that fruit production in crops increased with the frequency of visits by non-bee pollinators. It was also determined that non-bee insects were able to pollinate at times of day and in weather conditions when bees are unable to do so. They were also "more efficient in transferring pollen for some crops under certain conditions" and were able "to carry pollen further distances than some bees."

The survey noted the studies had demonstrated the importance of including non-bee insects in crop pollination surveys and pollination management practices.

Butterflies and other non-bee insect pollinators play a major role in global crop production.
