Pay attention and play it safe on the farm

According to Canadian Agricultural Injury Reporting (CAIR) statistics, more than 100 people die every year in Canada from agriculture-related incidents, and many more are injured on the farm. Annually during the third week in March, the Canadian Agricultural Safety Association (CASA), in conjunction with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture (CFA), organizes Canadian Agricultural Safety Week with the goal of keeping farmers, workers and members of farming communities safe. This year's campaign, which takes place March 12 to 18, is the second installment of the three-year theme Be an AgSafe Family and will focus on the well-being of adults.

Understanding safety protocols

Safety is everyone's responsibility. Farmers need to clearly communicate which procedures workers should use when handling machinery, livestock and hazardous materials. Workers need to follow protocols and provide feedback when amendments should be made to procedures. A simple safety policy that's shared with all workers should be implemented in every workplace, and ongoing training is another necessary step towards diminishing hazards. All members of the farm team need to participate in safety initiatives and follow best practices.

Be prepared

Sometimes all it takes is a split second for an agricultural incident to occur. Being prepared can save a life. Members of farming communities can better equip themselves for dealing with emergencies by doing the following.

- Keep first aid kits handy in tractors and other vehicles, at home, and in workshops.
- Enroll in first aid and CPR classes.
- Discuss possible actions to take during scenarios such as an electric shock, someone being trapped under a tractor, or an individual getting caught inside a grain elevator.
- Display emergency information at every telephone.

t's dress-shopping time — do you feel like exploring new horizons, perhaps looking for something a little off the beaten path? If so, be sure to keep in mind two simple things: you don't want to end up looking like a peacock, and you don't need to shock in order to stand out from the crowd. In fact, all you need is a simple pastel palette.

How about a little review of recent styles: just a year ago, the ultimate avant-gardist, Oscar de la Renta, presented a 2013 bridal collection strewn with clear blue tones. Some of his majestic creations were wrapped in powder blue organza that were simply divine. Vera Wang, the celebrated bridal gown designer, used the same theme when she unveiled a diverse collection with "nude" tones as the star attraction.

The colour theme, both glamorous and romantic, continues to be of interest this year, with pastel tones very much in the spotlight. Sea green, pale pink, quartz pink, peach: we are seeing a veritable bouquet of soft, delicate colours that give real feminine charm to the bride. Complementary tones include gold, green, and gray. A coloured gown can be complemented with tone on tone accessories in order to stay neutral, or contrasting colours to add dimension.

Have you always dreamed of getting married in your grandmother's fur stole? Vintage pieces combined with a pastel gown will help you create an original yet modern look.

Driving under the influence puts lives at risk

The dangers associated with impaired driving are well known. Nevertheless, every holiday season, countless drivers get behind the wheel either exhausted or under the influence of alcohol, medication or illicit drugs, putting the lives of others at risk as well as their own.

Are you planning on hitting the bar at your holiday shindig? There's nothing wrong with having fun, as long as you don't get behind the wheel afterward! Public transportation, taxis, designated drivers — there are many ways to get home safe and sound without driving your personal vehicle. Other sensible solutions include staying the night or renting a room at a nearby hotel.

BEWARE

Like extreme fatigue, alcohol, illegal drugs, and medication affect a person's cognitive functions and compromise their ability to drive. In addition to clouding one's judgment, these substances impair a person's concentration, coordination and reaction time.

Dispensing with myths

Even today, many false beliefs about impaired driving continue to circulate. It's about time we unveil the truth behind these misconceptions!

- I ate after I drank; therefore, it's safe to get behind the wheel. Actually, eating after a night of drinking changes absolutely nothing, as the alcohol has already entered your bloodstream. And since the effects of alcohol won't disappear with a little food in your tummy, it's definitely not safe to drive!
- Prescription drugs are a lot less dangerous than illicit drugs. Many types of prescription and overthe-counter medication can significantly compromise a person's ability to drive. Their various side effects (drowsiness, dizziness, blurred vision, reduced concentration, etc.) can be just as dangerous behind the wheel as those of certain illegal substances.
- Men have a higher alcohol tolerance than women. A person's sex doesn't necessarily influence their tolerance level. However, things like body weight, fatigue, medication and metabolism do.
- Police officers can't tell when someone is under the influence of drugs. False! Police officers are specially trained to evaluate someone's ability to drive in different ways by administering a physical coordination test, for example. Furthermore, a driver can be brought in for further evaluation by a drug recognition expert at the local station.

Mixing alcohol with drugs (prescription medication included) leads to a greater impairment of cognitive functions, increasing your risk of causing a crash
